To Ms. Bodolay:

I'm not sure this is permissible, but if it is, add to my FTCA complaint the contents of the web site, www.defraudingamerica.com/lawsuit_reno.html. The website content is a lawsuit that I filed in the U.S. district court that explains more fully the sequence of events that led to the filing of the FTCA claim that you received.

The sequence of events is a sordid example of how people in key position can subvert the legal duties of certain government offices. The contents of that lawsuit again puts people in the U.S. Department of Justice on notice of a deep-seated pattern of criminal activities that I first sought to bring to justice while I was an inspector-investigator for the Federal Aviation Administration. That attempt was blocked by felony coverups and obstruction of justice that led to me discovering additional areas of criminal activities by people in key government positions. Eventually, government power was misused against me to silence me, which made the criminal activities even worse.

At this stage, people in the U.S. Department of Justice, by doing nothing, are covering up for these crimes against the United States. Arguably, that continues my claims against the Justice Department, by refusing to provide relief when it is long overdue.

In the event an interest arises to settle this matter, and also look into the evidence I have collected, and if negotiations would be preferred through an attorney, I could arrange to hire one for that purpose.

Sincerely,

Rodney Stich
