Solicitor General of the United States
Office of Solicitor General

Ref: Information from former federal aviation safety agent concerning areas of primary blame being ignored, and complicity of many sharing blame—including prior solicitor generals

To Mr. Olson:

There is a certain unfortunate irony that you, the present solicitor general of the United States, should suffer a great personal loss that was made possible by the corruption that I sought to report, and which was protected by many who engaged in coverups, indifference, or actual obstruction of justice. Even some of the prior solicitor generals knew of these charges through lawsuits I filed seeking to report these matters under the federal crime reporting statute.

In my position as a federal aviation safety agent, and especially after I used the law in a creative manner while in that position, I acted as an independent counsel seeking to force correction of the deep-seated culture and corruption that played key roles in a long series of fatal airline crashes. The events of 9/11 were the latest and most prominent consequences of that same corruption and culture.

Among the methods I used trying to report these federal offenses—some of which later made 9/11 possible--were filing federal actions seeking to report the federal crimes under the federal crime reporting statute, Title 18 U.S.C. § 4¹ (and also 28 U.S.C. § 1361). A long series of federal judges (and Justice Department personnel) acted to block these reports, enabling the long series of catastrophic consequences to continue. In some of the federal lawsuits I sent copies of to the solicitor general, and their coverups made them complicit in the consequences. I don't recall sending a copy to the solicitor general of the latest lawsuit² seeking to report the corruption that enabled the events of 9/11 to occur.

It would be very difficult to find a more fitting example of the deadly "butterfly effect" than to realize that if these obviously needed preventative measures had been taken that I and other federal agents had reported—and had not blocked by corruption—the terrorists of 9/11 would never have succeeded in gaining control of the four aircraft, and the many subsequent reactions would not have been taken.

It is surely a classic example of the degree of arrogance in government offices to address the brutal misuse of government power by federal judges and Justice Department personnel to silence me, and the vast coverups by virtually every check and balance. The despicable misconduct made possible the brutal deaths on that memorable day. But they were only one-day's victims of the spreading corruption that will continue as before, made possible by cowards and others who block the exposure of these matters.

I am enclosing a copy of a declaration dated April 12, 2004, that I sent to Chairman Kean of the 9/11 commission, with copies to other people. The documented corruption stated in that declaration, some of which made the events of 9/11 possible, will as usual be covered up. Additional information concerning the corruption that I discovered and documented over the years can be found at the following sites:
